There has been a research about the attendance of English galleries and museums. It was found out that nowadays more and more museums are becoming forgotten. However, some of them are prosperous. This situation takes place because of differences between museums and differences in people's interests. Therefore, many sources of inspiration get lost.

Since 2013 the attendance rate of ~~for~~ the British Museum has risen from 2.6 million to 5.6 million people. The museum attracts tourists because it contains information about the history of ~~the~~ the United Kingdom. I should mention that ~~there~~ the history of all the spheres of human life is introduced here. It is much more interesting for people to look what people were wearing in the past than to watch scientific documents. The National Gallery has works of art of many artists. It may seem really complicated to understand the artist's hidden point of view but a lot of visitors just love watching pictures for hours. However, the Science Museum and the Natural History Museum need substantial changes because there is a possibility that people will stop visiting these places at all. I suppose such scientific institutions should draw visitors' attention on interesting side of science. People want to get bright impressions and most of them consider history and science boring. Directors should hire guides with appropriate oral skills. These people must be able to talk about the most boring thing in the world in an emotional way. Employers should be taught body language because it plays a significant role in understanding. In 2013 the Science Museum had 3.8 million people ~~annually~~ and in 2017 it has the lowest attendance rate of all.

That is really important to treat all the museums and galleries respectively because it is a cultural heritage. ~~Unsee~~ Unsuccessful museums should apply new methods of attracting the visitor.
